ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

The publication of this work has been undertaken for two audiences. First, it is intended for use in introductory classes in United States History as a springboard for student research. Faculty teaching introductory U.S. history courses are encouraging students to understand the historian's craft and to discover how historians-from simple building blocks such as these inventories-begin to formulate concepts which result in the writing of history. Through a "hands-on" approach, it is hoped that students might come to have a greater appreciation for the interpretation of documents and the creation of historical narratives from such "building blocks". This work is intended secondly as a research aid for the many "armchair historians" in the local, regional, and national communities who have come to enjoy local and family history during recent years.

The inventories format should be considered a "work in progress". As further transcriptions of documents are completed, this work will be more nearly complete. Errors, which inadvertently find their way into any work such as this, will be corrected in future publications. Wherever possible the original spellings found in the inventories have been maintained. Often a word might be spelled in a variety of ways in one single inventory. During the seventeenth century there was no "one" correct spelling of a given word. Webster's Dictionary was still far in the future.

At times, there are lacunae in the original documents themselves, indicating that already by the time a copy of the original document was made, whether at the time of recording it or in the early eighteenth century, the original had been damaged in some fashion. At other times, the document is so faded or worn that an accurate interpretation can not be made. In yet other cases, the handwriting might be so illegible that words can not be deciphered. In such cases, in this transcription, brackets are ordinarily used where the missing word(s) would have been located.

The documents in this work have been transcribed from microfilms at the Edward H. Nabb Research Center for Delmarva History and Culture at Salisbury University. The following records were consulted in the creation of this study.

The transcriber and compiler is indebted to Peggy Genvert, Barry Neville, and Edward Jones, instructors of history at Salisbury University for their continued support and assistance in this work. Pamela Collins, then a graduate student at the Center, was kind in assisting me in the preparation of this work and in making thoughtful suggestions about correct "wording" in particularly difficult inventories. Also Rebecca Miller, Director of the Edward H. Nabb Research Center for Delmarva History and Culture, and her capable and ever-helpful staff, Donna Messick, Iris Powell, and Rebecca Brooks were ever-present and ever helpful in the formulation of this monograph. Andy Chance, graduate student in history offered his considerable knowledge of computers in helping format this lengthy and temperamental document. Mia Vye, executive assistant in the history department, whose kindly words actually allowed this work to see the light of day, was a never-failing source of encouragement and a true angel.

PREFACE TO THE REVISED EDITION

Initially the revision of Studies in the Primary Sources of the Lower Eastern Shore was prompted by the decision to correct typographical errors in the original manuscript. In addition, as I transcribed additional inventories, it was clear that a revised edition of this volume should be made due to the large increase in number of transcribed inventories. This edition has been more than doubled in size by the addition of a variety of inventories. In each case, I was led by the desire to illustrate the diversity of life here on the Lower Eastern Shore. Although the initial edition was limited to Bogerternorton Hundred, one of the nine hundreds into which old Somerset was divided, in this edition, I have provided inventories for all areas of the county, as well as individuals from various walks of life. The “new” inventories provide substantially more information about the social and economic conditions in which the first generation of Old Somerset settlers found themselves than that which was found in the original volume. Here husbands and wives are inventoried rich and poor, planters and merchants, shoemakers and coopers, chirurgeons and cordwainers. In short I have striven to provide the basics for the recreation of a microcosm of life here in Old Somerset with the hope that students will be encouraged to help write the rich history of Delmarva’s past using her original sources.

Since the earliest inventories are often very difficult to read, either because of the unfamiliar handwriting of seventeenth century clerks, or because of the faded condition of the original records, I was determined to add significantly more inventories from this germinal period of Eastern Shore settlement. Where I have been unable to decipher the original script, I have provided the closest transcription possible, even though that too might sometimes appear unrecognizable as a word in a dictionary today. At other times, I have merely left a blank line indicating the omission of a word or words. Throughout, I have tried to leave the original spellings, even though there was a great temptation to correct and to make uniform the various spellings, since a given word might be spelled in a number of different ways in one single document. In a few cases, I have enclosed in brackets a word which might be so badly misspelled that the reader might not be able to recognize the actual word.

As stated above, the inventories provide a cross section of the inhabitants of seventeenth century Old Somerset. Although the majority of Eastern Shore residents farmed the land, within the planter class itself there were substantial economic and social divisions. Great extremes of wealth separated those who owned the majority of Old Somerset’s land and those who were merely eking out a living there. Certain estate owners are identified by the term Mr., a title which would have been accorded to only a very few individuals. Widows or single women might also leave inventories. Merchants, planters, sailors, lawyers, tanners, tailors, shoemakers, surgeons, ministers, coopers, cordwainers, wheelwrights, weavers, and innkeepers are all recorded as resident in Somerset during this period and have left informative inventories.

Many extended family groupings are also found within these inventories. In a few cases, the inventories are of a husband and wife who lost their lives at the same time in Indian uprisings. How many wives died before their husbands, there is no sure way of knowing. The fact that the inventories of several members of a single family are recorded at approximately the same time might indicate that these family members may have died as a result of some disease which was ravaging the area or that they might have died as a result of impure water or improperly processed food.

Finally, although this work deals primarily with inventories, I have included a few examples of accounts as well. Accounts provide an additional type of information and should be used in conjunction with inventories to draw a more complete picture of a person's life in Old Somerset. Accounts might record such valuable information as debts owed to or by the deceased. An account could also provide a clue to the religious predisposition of the deceased as often a minister is paid to deliver a funeral sermon. Accounts might also provide information about relatives, especially married daughters who are left legacies and whose married name is not recorded elsewhere. Finally, accounts flesh out the social network by indicating who were the neighbors of the deceased.

About this Volume

In addition to the 316 inventories and accounts which I have transcribed and compiled here, there is one additional inventory of a Somerset County individual who died before 1700 which has not been included. I have tried, on a number of occasions, to decipher the words on the various microfilms. The inventory listed below is completely unreadable on the microfilms which I used in the preparation of this work. In going to the Hall of Records in Annapolis, Md., which holds the original Somerset County documents, I was not allowed to read the original document; therefore, this document remains untranscribed. As I find additional inventories of this early period, they will be added to this work as an appendix in order that this part of the economic record of early Delmarva might be more complete.

The above name is taken from Edward F. Jones, Jr., Inventories of Old Somerset County, Maryland, 1666-1720: A Locator Index with User Information, 1996, published at Salisbury State University Research Center for Delmarva History and Culture, 67 pp.

A NOTE ABOUT SPELLING AND TERMINOLOGY

Introductory users will perhaps have difficulty making their way through what appears to be an incredible amount of misspellings in the documents. I have tried as much as was feasible to leave the spelling of each word as it appeared in the inventory being transcribed. In trying to make sense, the researcher should try to sound out the word to get a clearer understanding of just what the word was that the clerk was actually writing. Secondly, there are a number of specialized dictionaries and glossaries which will help understand little-known terms or specialized terms. With financial assistance from the Maryland Historical Trust and the Nabb Research Center for Delmarva History and Culture, graduate students Kevin Russell and James Jensen have worked closely with me in attempting to bridge that gap by providing a Glossary of Unusual and Little-Used Terms In Colonial British America: 17th Century Maryland Court Records. This 52 page glossary, illustrated with images of the sorts of objects found in colonial inventories, is available from the Nabb Center and should assist in alleviating the frustrations of scholars attempting to read and understand the colonial records.

APPENDIX A

Attached is a preliminary indication of the distribution of wealth in Old Somerset County, Maryland between 1666-1700 based on inventoried estates. The results of this work came from the labors of graduate students in a graduate seminar during the summer of 1996. The students in that seminar took the inventoried estates of all the counties in Maryland (those existing before 1700) and did analyses of the comparative wealth of inhabitants in the various counties and among the various counties. The first chart lists the wealth of Somerset County residents beginning with those who had the largest estates. Six individuals had estates ranging from 500 pounds sterling to nearly 1700 pounds sterling during that formative period of settlement in Old Somerset County Maryland. Following those are twenty individuals whose wealth exceeded 200 pounds sterling but was less than 499 pounds sterling. A third grouping lists nineteen individuals whose accumulated wealth ranged between 100 pounds sterling and 199 pounds sterling. These first three groupings would, by and large, have dominated colonial Somerset economically, socially, and politically. Their names appear frequently in the court records as leaders of the fledgling Eastern Shore area. The remaining 178 inventoried estates range from 1 pound sterling in wealth to 99 pounds sterling.

Much information can be gleaned about the lives of the people who lived on colonial Delmarva from this economic information. Clearly, the socio-economic basis for life here on Delmarva was largely a replication of what the colonists had seen at home. The one distinct difference was that there was an amazing social mobility in the seventeenth century Chesapeake which would not have been possible in England. This mobility was to lessen as the century progressed and as colonial Delmarva society itself became more stabilized. By the mid-eighteenth century there was demonstrably less upward social and economic mobility than was observable in the century of the planting of European settlement in Colonial North America.

A few very wealthy planters and merchants dominated Old Somerset society. Thomas Purnell, spawned a family which was to control much of the eastern area of Old Somerset, that part which would be lopped off as Worcester County in 1742. Captain William Stevens made his mark in land speculation. William Monteith was likely a recently arrived merchant whose untimely death in 1699 removed his family from further representation in Delmarva. Colonel David Browne, Captain Thomas Walker, and Mr. John Nutthall were planters and factors whose prominence in seventeenth century Delmarva is demonstrated in court and land records.

Below this wealthy upper echelon was a second group of planters who “rubbed elbows” with those immediately above them. Members of these two groups intermarried and joined already large estates into even larger holdings. From this group came many of the most prominent leaders of the area: Charles Ballard, Captain John King, Andrew Whittington, Charles Ratcliffe, Robert Richardson, Colonel William Coulbourne, Daniel Selby, John Evans, Ambrose White, James Dashiell, and Walter Powell.. These men were wealthy planters, had extensive shipping interests, and a virtual monopoly on office holding.

The third grouping (those with inventoried wealth of 100-199 pounds sterling) was much like the group directly above it economically. Its members were also leaders in the hundreds and on the county level. John White, Stephen Costin, Edward Smith Sr., Edward Day, William Ennis, Sr., Robert Willson, Colonel John Winder, and Robert Houston were all wielders of remarkable power in their local areas. It would appear that the English "Squirearchy" was being grafted onto colonial Delmarva by the late seventeenth century. Along with this went an incredibly densely woven kinship network. Within this group of 19 individuals, there were numerous family connections. Four children of William Ennis, Sr. intermarried with the Edward Smith family, yet other Ennis children married into the John Bishop family, while yet others were connected to the neighboring Turville and Poynter families. This is but one example of that kinship network which was to come into play so strongly in colonial Delmarva.

A surprising number of merchants appear within the fourth grouping, those with inventoried wealth of 71-99 pounds sterling. Thomas Evandon, Archibald Erskine, Josias Seaward were all prosperous merchants. Ann Smith, the sole female listed in this grouping, was the widow of Edward Smith Sr., one of the largest landowners on the Seaside are of Old Somerset. Her children were to marry into both the social group above and below. It is a mark of considerable distinction that she is the first female to have an extensive estate inventoried in Somerset. Not only was there an inventory made of her estate, but also an extensive accounting of her estate provides much valuable information above family life, health, family interrelationships and social networking, as well as information about religious traditions of the family.

Much more could be extracted from these charts and from the documents which exist for each of these early settlers of Somerset County, Maryland. Hopefully, this work will stimulate additional research into this very important area of colonial development, making possible a more realistic and representative understanding of what colonial life in British North America really was. This seventeenth century colonial story has often told almost exclusively from a New England perspective, since those historical records have been "mined" by serious scholars for more than two centuries. The Chesapeake area, however, has largely been ignored, especially, the area of the Eastern Shore, whose records, interestingly enough, comprise the oldest continuous public records in British America, having not suffered court house burning, destruction during war, or disappearance from benign neglect of the recorded materials. It is with these "values" in mind that this work is set forth as a springboard for future research.

APPENDIX B

Attached herewith is a representative sampling of the handwriting of Somerset County clerks and the Maryland provincial court clerks from the seventeenth century. The difficulties in transcribing the documents stem sometimes from the crabbed penmanship of the clerks, sometimes from the faded nature of the documents, and sometimes from the spelling habits of the various clerks, which varied amazingly from line to line of each document. Secondly, often the microfilm copies of the original records add an additional problem. They are often blurred and sometimes pagination or significant parts of the document itself are omitted from the filming. As I am able to utilize more of the original records housed at the Maryland State Archives in Annapolis, MD., these difficulties will become less burdensome. The attached examples of inventories demonstrate mutely some of the difficulties encountered in the transcription process.

APPENDIX C

SAMPLES OF SOCIETAL NETWORKING ON THE 17th CENTURY EASTERN SHORE

SOCIETAL NETWORKING ON THE EASTERN SHORE

Family was very important in the newly developing world order on the Eastern Shore. Only a few years after the initial settlement of Northampton County, Virginia, there was considerable movement up the Shore from Virginia, into the eastern shore areas of Maryland and Delaware. Although, early in the seventeenth century, individual traders, trappers, and explorers made their way into the lower Eastern Shore, most early settlers tended to move as extended family units.

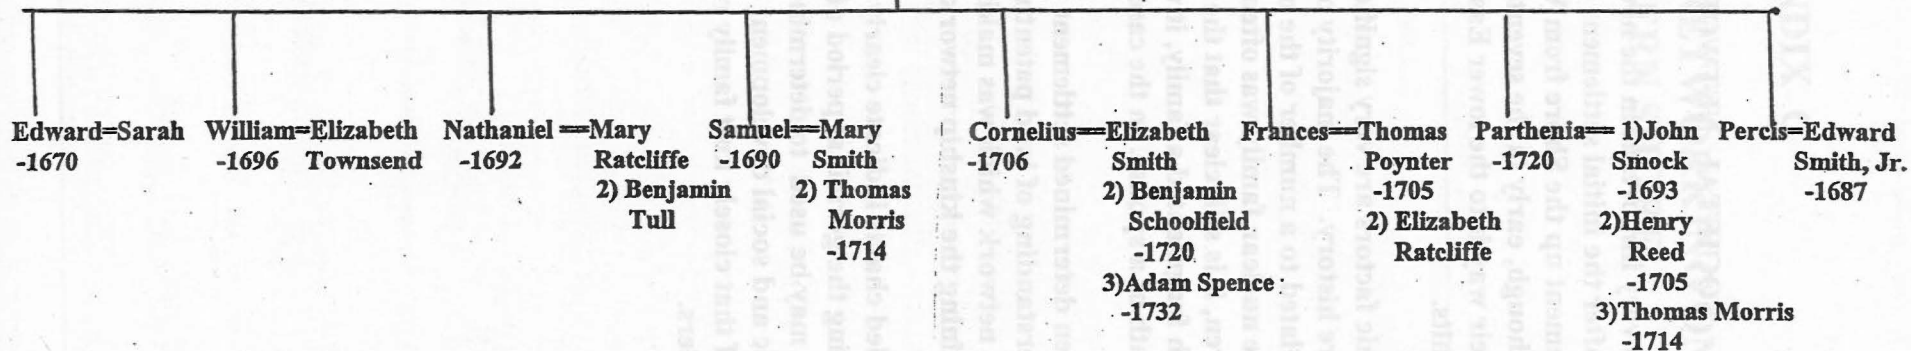

Demographic factors are very significant to an understanding of the kinship patterns of early Eastern Shore history. The majority of individuals whose inventories are included in this volume are interrelated to a number of the other families whose representatives are inventoried here. Although the nuclear family was often fragmented by the death of a husband or wife, or of one or more children, it is still clear that the family unit was well-developed as early as the 1640s. When death fragmented a family, it was usually not a year before a remarriage took place after the death of a spouse. In the case of a widow, often the time was substantially less.

Kinship often determined settlement patterns. Relatives tended to patent land near other relatives. An understanding of land patenting then is crucial to an understanding of the ever-expanding kinship network which was making its mark on Delmarva. Social mobility is equally important in examining the kinship network which developed.

The appended charts indicate clearly the complex webbing of relationships on the Lower Eastern Shore during the germinal period of settlement. Charts such as these serve a multiplicity of functions---they may be used to determine nuclear family, to understand the extended family, and to see economic and social development of an area. The Ennises, Smiths and Bishops are merely examples of that closely knit family relationship which developed among the first generations of settlers.
